This symposium represents the culmination of the MPH student's work through the year. All MPH students complete a practicum experience, in which they apply the knowledge they have gained in the classroom in the real world of public health. The practicum experience is set in a public health agency or organization, and the preceptor and student identify a public health project of mutual interest. Projects are as varied as the field of public health itself and the interests of our students. Examples include program evaluations, case studies, research, policy analyses and descriptive studies.

Join us in recognizing the hard work that these students have put in all year. The presentations will be followed by a reception where poster and recognition awards will be announced.
